Amendment

22c. Stresses that commitments and declarations about promoting the women, peace and security (WPS) agenda and equal representation of women in foreign and security policy often remain rhetoric rather than aiming and ensuring actual implementation, leading to limited progress on the agenda's goals worldwide; reminds that women's participation in peace and security processes can play a significant role in determining the success and sustainability of peace agreements, as well as the durability and quality of peace; calls on the EU and its member states to exercise leadership in the implementation of the WPS agenda and to work for overcoming:

- the continued resistance of mediators and negotiators to include women in peace talks,*
- the resistance of post-conflict planners to analyse women's needs and allocate sufficient resources to address them,*
- the resistance of political parties to front women candidates, - the resistance of security services to prevent violence against women,*
- the resistance of rule of law actors to apply agreed international law to the investigation and prosecution of crimes against women*
